Special ESCORT!

THOUGH THE PARK was bright and sunny, Micky's face was cloudy and overcast. She had a problem! Of what use to her were trees and songbirds when she had no hope, no possible hope, of finding an escort who would take her to the party that night!

"I wouldn't be caught dead going by myself!" she thought moodily. Every fibre of her quivered with rage and resentment at the mere idea. "As for Lennie, I'll never date him again!" Lennie was the escort-who-was-to-have-been, but who had phoned her that very afternoon to tell her the date was off.

"Had a toothache this morning," he had moaned over the phone, "so I went to have it looked at! Dentist took one look...out came the tooth! Cheek's so swollen I can't see over it! Sorry about the party, Micky, but..."

Micky's gloomy face deepened into acute anger. Her black eyes snapped as she muttered, "Sorry! I'll bet he is! A lot he cares about my new dress! A lot he cares..." Instead of finishing her bitter thought, she lashed out with the pointed toe of her high-heeled opera pump, aiming it at a bed of marigolds that lined the park path.

"Take that!" she said, kicking again.

"Hey, miss, you can't do that! That's park property!"

Micky turned around to face a tall policeman whose sunburned face was stern and critical under the snappy visor of his cap. "Who says I can't?" she demanded.

"The law says you can't," he answered firmly. His air of finality enraged Micky to a point beyond endurance.

"The law? Don't tell me about the law!" she blazed. "If you smart policemen would only prevent crimes instead of waiting for them to happen, you wouldn't have to go around yelling at people and arresting them! Let me tell you..."

The policeman removed his peaked cap and ran his fingers through his thick blonde hair. "Look, Miss," he interrupted, "nobody said anything about crimes! It's not a question of a crime!"

"Oh, isn't it?" Micky looked triumphant, as though she'd just caught him in a lie. "It's certainly a crime that Lennie Wilkins had to have his tooth out and can't take me to the party tonight! And it's another crime that I have a new cocktail dress and no place to wear it! And it's another crime..."

"All right, all right, you win!" The policeman was plainly unable to cope with Micky's special brand of "logic". "What's your complaint?"

"I've just told you!" Micky crossed her arms and glared at him as though to say, "What are you prepared to do about it?"

The policeman looked at Micky and Micky looked at him for some time. "You know," he remarked finally, "you're kinda cute!"

"You're not bad-looking, either," she said.

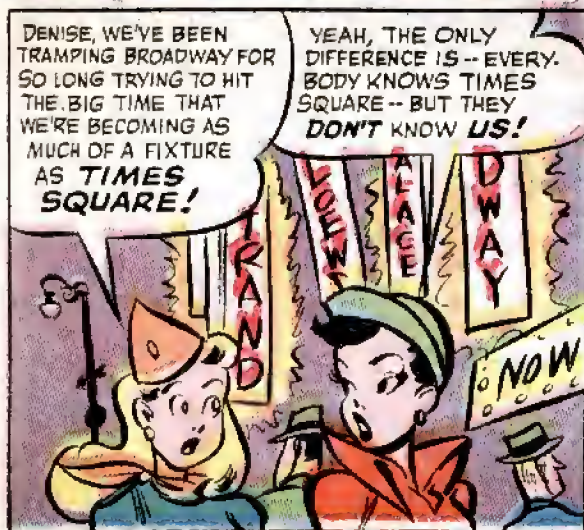

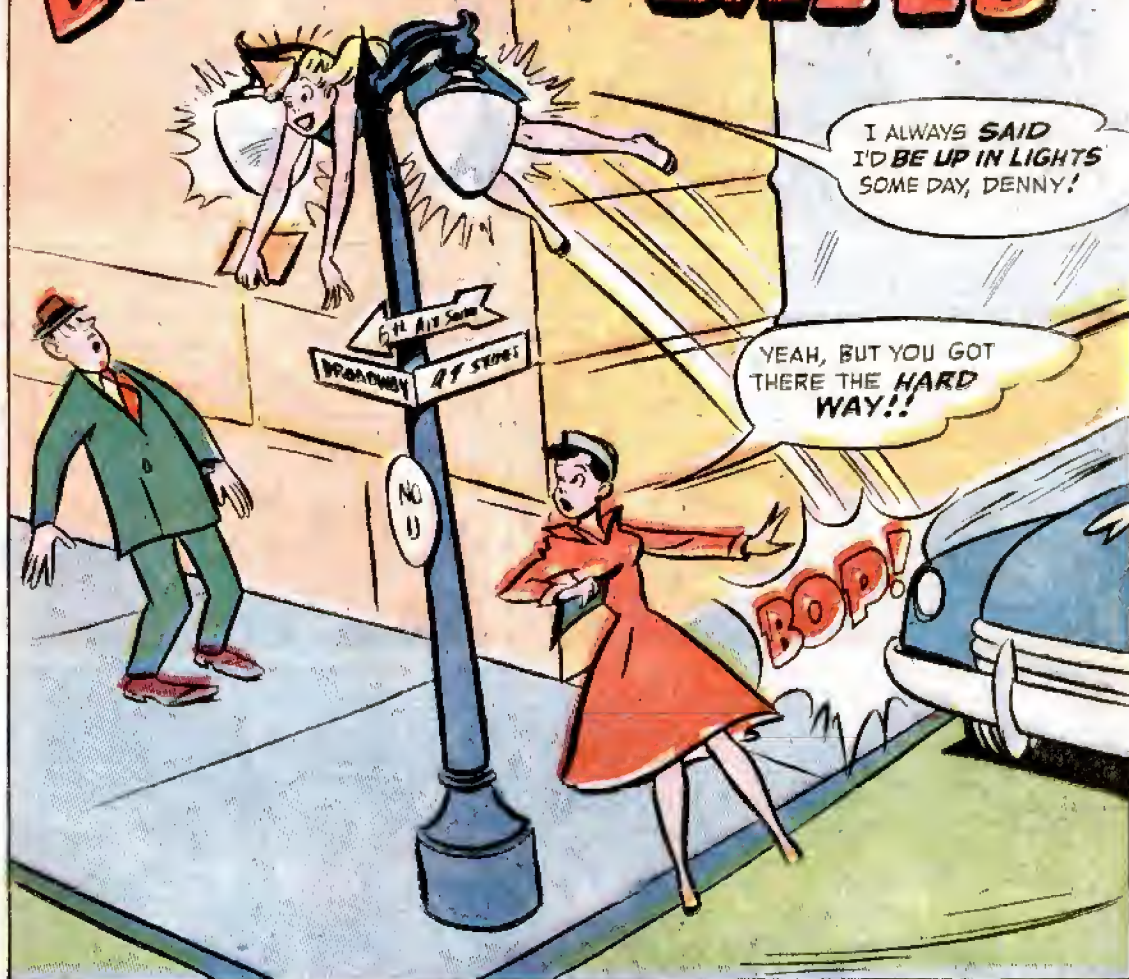

No one at the party was at all surprised when Micky turned up that night, escorted by a handsome policeman in uniform.

"Where'd you get him?" one of the girls asked enviously.

"I simply explained to him that it would be a crime for him not to escort me," Micky answered blandly.

"And it sure would have been!" grinned her special police escort, taking her in his arms. "Dance?"

ITSY-BITSY TOOTSIES

DOLLY SURVEYED THE window display with a good deal of interest before she entered the store. A salesman, attracted by her pert face and figure, rushed to greet her.

"Can I help you, Miss?" he asked.

"Certainly," Dolly smiled graciously at him as she sat down. "I want a pair of those sandals in the window. You know, the ones with very little in front and almost nothing in the back and the straps that don't cross!"

For a moment, the salesman was bewildered. He'd heard ladies describe shoes before, but this description was even stranger than most. "Very little in front..." he started to repeat, and then his face lit up. "Oh, you mean number forty-six. If you'll just remove your shoe, I'll measure your foot for size, Miss."

Dolly looked him right in the eye. "I wear a size four."

Puzzled, the shoe salesman looked down at her feet which were trim and well-arched, but hardly as tiny as she claimed. "Uh...these shoes come in...er...irregular sizes," he said, "so maybe it would be better if I measured your foot anyhow!"

"All right." Dolly kicked off one shoe and placed her foot on the floor ruler. "But the largest I've ever worn is four and a half! And those were enormous!"

Kneeling, the shoe salesman looked at the ruler, then at Dolly's foot and then up into her assured face. "But your foot measures six!" he said.

"How dare you?" Forgetting that she wasn't wearing her shoe, Dolly stamped her foot on the ruler. "I wear a size four!"

The salesman, feeling that he was about to lose his sanity, tried to reason with Dolly. "If you try to get into a four," he pointed out, "you'll just kill yourself! Believe me, I..."

"I have only one thing to say!" Dolly was very strict and formal in her manner. "You, sir, are no gentleman!"

Suddenly, a pale light began to dawn on the salesman. A faint smile wreathed his lips as he realized the fact that there was a solution to this impasse. "I'm sorry," he said gallantly, bowing in courtly style, "but I am wrong, of course! I beg your pardon! I shall bring you the shoes at once!"

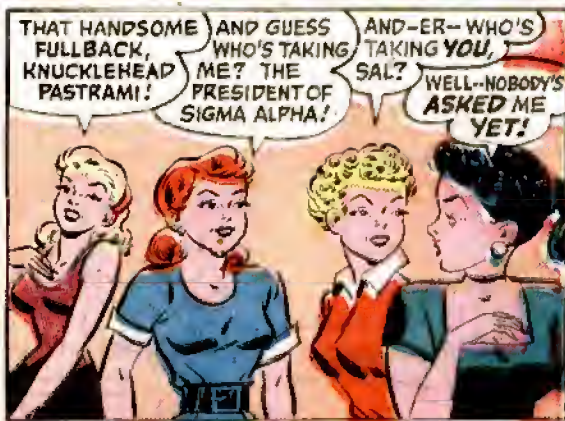

With a jaunty spring to his walk, the salesman departed to the stock-room, returning shortly with a box containing a pair of the sandals Dolly had asked for. "Will you slip these on?" he asked. "They're a size four...of course!"

"Of course," murmured Dolly, slipping her foot into a shoe with perfect ease. "And you see? They fit divinely!"

After making a neat parcel of the shoes and showing Dolly to the door, the salesman parted from her with smiles and words of friendship and mutual respect. But after Dolly had left, he turned to the pretty girl at the cashier's desk and said with a worried frown, "I hope she doesn't look inside those shoes! They're marked size six as plainly as can be!"

The cashier looked at him in scornful amazement. "You don't know much about women, do you?" she asked. "You can take my word for it...she won't look inside those shoes!"
